The top image shows the IKEA website homepage with a large image of a white shelving unit filled with plants and books. The bottom image shows the same website with a 'Welcome to IKEA Canada' message and a 'Today only! Free delivery' offer.

RECOMMENDATIONS

ONLINE

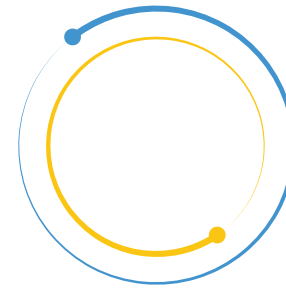

- IKEA should remove the out-of-stock items from the product listing.
- IKEA should give a single-click checkout option which will make the buying process seamless.
- IKEA should integrate better-targeted advertisements on social media, as when I was looking for a bookshelf I was getting advertisements for cookware.
- IKEA can utilise some augmented reality features on its website to showcase their product in real locations

IN-PERSON

- IKEA should put its branding more effectively on the food items it sells at the food court and its famous $1 hot dogs and strawberry ice creams.
- IKEA should give out a printed store map or a QR code to navigate the store along with various aisle numbers.
- IKEA should increase the number of self-checkout kiosks to make purchases faster and seamless.
